A Good Year for the Top 50

The year in rear view was better than expected for most company execs.

In 2010, 38 companies' revenues were up, 10 were down and two were flat. The Top 50 companies confirm just how energy-dependent the local economy remains, as roughly 40 percent of the businesses on the list derive all or a portion of their revenues from the oil and gas industry.

One such company was Fire & Safety Specialists, a safety products and services company founded in 2002 and headquartered in Maurice. It's important to keep in mind that a revenue decline doesn't necessarily translate into softer earnings. Again FSS is a prime example. Last year presented new competitive challenges for the company, says founder Chad Meaux, but with the closing of the books came a sigh of relief. "It's the first year in our history that we did not have a good percentage of revenue increase, and we probably worked harder than ever," Meaux says. "We did not drop much, but we did not gain revenue. We were very fortunate that our profits were where they were; in fact they even increased a little."

Faced with uncertainty due to the offshore drilling moratorium, local companies more than held their own. Here's how the top 25 on the 2010 list fared:

Companies ranked by annual revenues. Companies with slightly higher revenues before figures were rounded appear first; those with equal revenues are listed alphabetically. ABIZ assumes information provided by companies is accurate. In several instances, revenues for auto dealers include more than one dealership. *Approximate revenues and employment for companies that decline to release sales figures and other information are based on a variety of sources, including Dun & Bradstreet and industry trends and estimates for their type of business. Lafayette Surgical Hospital is making its last appearance on the list, as 58 percent of the hospital was purchased earlier this year by a Chicago-based group.
